The invention is based on a method for producing a patterned coating. Electro-optical or light-sensitive coatings can be applied to surfaces of substrates and can be patterned by way of the known methods of exposure and development. In the case of coatings that are applied to surfaces of plastic substrates, however, these methods can not be used without further measures since the substrates are generally impermeable to the used developers. Such a requirement is true in particular for the production of a printed circuit. In order to create such a circuit, a layer, which is applied to the substrate and can be patterned, is generally exposed in a lithographic process and developed in
